There is a well authenticated story of Scrope Davis, a London dandy of a hundred years ago, an inveterate gambler, but also a man of talent, a gentleman and a wit. One night he was introduced to a young man named Hastings, who had inherited a colossal fortune, much of which he had already gambled away. They commenced to play hazard. Hastings remarking at the same time that he must soon cut that sort of fun, as he was about to marry and settle down.

Scrope was in great luck. Mair after main he won and as often wished to cease play, but Hastings who continued to play
